As well as could be told from the shores of Manhattan and Ward's Island there was no disorder.

The New York, New Haven and Hartford tug got a line to the Dolphin about half an hour after she struck and attempted to pull her off the reef. The fireboat McClellan stood by, and appeared to be ready to render assistance should it prove necessary. At that time the tide was almost low, and the chances were that the Dolphin would stay on the reef until the next tide unless soon released.
